

GIVE YOUR CAT HIS OR HER OWN FURNITURE

The scratching post should be rough and coarse. Buy a sisal (a harsh, scratchy hemp product) scratching post or make your own inexpensively.

Just nail a piece of 2 x 4 board to an inch thick square base and cover both pieces with a carpet remnant (tightly woven pile is best).

You can even use a tree branch or a board angled against a wall and secured so it won't fall over.

TRAIN YOUR CAT

When a kitten starts to scratch furniture, gently pull it off and place its front paws on the scratching post. Keep the post in an easily accessible place so the cat becomes accustomed to using it.

If an older cat persists in scratching furniture, give it a squirt of lukewarm water from a child's water gun. Spray it any place but in the face. At the same time, say a sharp "No." Then take the cat back to its scratching post.

Shake a small amount of pleasantly scented bath oil on a piece of cotton. Attach the cotton to the part of the furniture that the cat scratches. It will repel the cat as long as the aroma remains.

Your cat gives you love and loyalty. It's the most he or she can give. You owe your cat the same love and loyalty. But you owe your furry friend one thing more—to leave his or her paws and claws.

Paws Come With Claws

IT'S ONE OF NATURE'S LAWS

SO IF YOU LOVE YOUR CAT,
DON'T DECLAW!

FRIENDS

Many people who genuinely love their cats have no idea what declawing means to their animals.

Declawing means far more than leaving your pet defenseless against an attack outdoors. It means:

- The severing of ligaments and tendons that bring pain.
- The creating of an imbalance that can lead to injury.
- A change in personality and temperament.
- A cat may go berserk, bite and growl.

It means you, as the cat owner, have renounced the responsibility you assumed when you fell in love with that kitten or cat.

WHAT HAPPENS TO A CAT WHEN HE OR SHE IS DECLAWED?

First, the cat awakens, feet throbbing under the bandages; next, the feline feels pain and has trouble walking.

The physical effect of declawing is gradual weakening of the muscles of the legs, shoulders and back. Balance is impaired. Emotionally cats feel defenseless and thus live in a constant state of stress, making them more prone to disease.

Despite having grace, a cat is not sure-footed. Without the lightning quick ability to grasp with claws, a cat can easily fall and be injured.

Deprived of claws, a cat may turn to the only other form of defense he or she has—teeth. It is fairly common for a declawed cat to become a biter. They do this out of fear and frustration.

WHAT CAN YOU DO TO PROTECT YOURSELF AND YOUR FURNITURE WITHOUT HARMING YOUR CAT?

HOW IMPORTANT ARE A CAT'S CLAWS?

Dr. Louis J. Camuti, a practicing veterinarian for 58 years, puts it this way:

"I wouldn't declaw a cat if you paid me $1,000 per nail!"

Have you often wondered about a cat's remarkable grace and agility, and faultless sense of balance? To a great extent, this is due to the animal's ingeniously designed retractable claws that allow the cat to establish footing for walking, running, springing, climbing, or stretching.

WHY DO PEOPLE MAKE THEIR ANIMALS SUFFER THE PAIN OF DECLAWING?

"To protect the furniture," is the most common reason.

"To keep my cat from scratching us when we try to play with him," is another.

Scratching is a normal characteristic of a healthy cat. It exercises the foot muscles and removes dead tissue from the nails. It also has a soothing, comforting effect that creates a tranquil disposition.

GIVE YOUR CAT A MANICURE

It is best to start as a kitten. Take your pet to a professional groomer, or you can do it yourself. Use a pair of clippers made specially for cats and follow these three steps:

1. Press gently on the top of the toe to extend the cat's claw.
2. Notice where the veins, which are pink, stop extending into the claw.
3. Use clippers made for cats to trim the top of the nail, leaving space between the veins and the cut mark.
